

Yining is a graduate of the London College of Communication with a MA in Photojournalism and Documentary Photography. Yining had intensive working experiences in the photography industry and she has covered stories all over China and Europe for many leading magazines, newspapers and organizations. She is actively writing and translating photography-related essays, books and curating exhibitions across China and Europe

Yining is also working closely with museums, galleries and other institutions. Her current research focuses on the tradition of British social documentary photography, contemporary Chinese landscape photography and contemporary photography publishing in China. Yining initiated the Go East Project (www.goeastblog.com) in 2014, which aims at introducing contemporary Chinese photography to the West, supporting young talents to establish a local photography platform of an international scope, and exploring the infinite possibilities of photography.
